RIght Honourable, moſt worthy are the examples, who by INDEuors & ACCeptance haue countenanced Grammar ſtudies. CRATes Mallotes, a noble man of Pergamus, beeing ſent Embaſſadour to Rome from king Attalus, & there by miſchance breaking his leg in a chanell, during the time of his cure, imploied his inuentions chiefely for the rudiments and inſtructions of tender youth: and he the firſt that contrined any diſcourſe in Latine of this ſubiect: by vvhoſe example, diuers of the nobilitie were likewiſe incited, as Suetonius recordeth. And hence it is (ſaith Quintilian)

that MARCus Tullius Cicero (the onelie counsellor of peace that euer Rome had (amongst the rest of his labours fruitfully diuulged) disdained not to compile certaine discourses of the Latine language. About the same time also IVLIus Cæsar, that noble renowned Generall (though seriously occupied in Militarie affaires) vvrote two Treatises vnto Cicero, de Analogia Grammatica: requesting his iudgement therein, as it appeareth by his Epistles ad Brutum. And these were the three WORThies, and thrice famous Authours for the Latine in their dayes: but for the Hebrue in the ancient of daies, the ingrauen IDEA of eminent felicitie excelleth. For the sole Monarch of the World, Paterque Patriæ Adam, Great Grandfather of all Enoshes sons, after he had learned Diuinitie, in the flourishing Schooles of Eden of ἀϛom: was appointed by Him, to read an Hebrew lecture (consisting of single appellations of seuerall creatures to our Grandmother Eue) and afterward to all her children. Whereupon Frischilinus (grounding vpon Scripture) doubteth not to tearme Adam the first Nomenclator, or Dictionary-teacher that euer was. Heere is to be seen the presidents in the arguments of languages to be rare & notable: but aboue all, the infallible DEMOnstration of Scripture, purchaseth absolute credite dite for this discipline, and putteth to vtter silence all gainsaying allegations.

Of all the liberall Sciences, so exquisitelie deuised for the generall good, and state of weale publike: not one, whereof the vvhole, or any seuerall branch be registred in holy Writ, sane grammaticall Elements, or litterall principles. Twentie times the spirit of GOD citeth the whole Alphabet or Christs crosse rowe in old Bible: the new testament mẽtioneth but three, iota, α, and ω: howbeit, in them is comprised, more mysticall perfection in skill of grammer arte, then either the large precepts of ancient or later Grammarians as yet haue attained vnto. In fine, right worthy be these AVTHors: most vvoorthy the holy TESTImonie of Gods most sacred word, to grace, commend, & authorize, the necessarie dignitie of the discipline of languages, from vulgare base contempt, or light esteeme: but where any noble COVntenance, or fauourable patronage for these, which to popular view are misdeemed vile? It is replied here: a bootlesse errand it vvere, to stray farre from home, sith a PATron, authenticall (yea the patterne of most excellent vviseḍom and honour) is so neere, or rather so deare vnto you: I meane the right Honourable your Honours father, vnder whose gracious protection and countenance, the schoole common-wealth of England, hath reaped most singular commodities, as in other meanes, so likewise by the reformed Latine Dictionarie, inlarged in fiue seuerall editions. Wherefore, daigne right Honourable, of natiue proneneſſe, and ingrafted facilitie, to protect and accept theſe tender Grammar Muſes: vvhich (in regard of the authour) though rude and ſlender, and but a mite for the million of the Diſciplines dignitie, yet I dare ſweare for him, both vndertaken, & atchieued for more ſpeedy directions & neceſſarie behoofe of learning: and ſo ſhall bee alwaies make true report of your Honours vndeſerued fauour; and confirmed with more cheerfull alacritie, to offer vp the fruites of riper iudgement, at the deuoted altare of your gracious acceptance.

Your Honours in all humility
entirely deuoted,

Simon Sturteuant.

To the industrious and discreete Schoolemaster.

Vrteous Reader, not long since, I sent vnto thee a small Treatise, intituled, the Latin Nomenclator: and now the English Latine Nomenclator of Greeke primitiue wordes, hoping of his brothers good successe and acceptance, desireth likewise to be entertained into thy seruice. Thou happely demaundest, What can the Nomenclator do? or wherein may he stand the Schollers in stead by his seruiceableneesse? I heare say, the vntoward youth answerd thee with this word Nothing. Nothing, that is strange (said you) ex nihilo nihil fit, is there any account or reckoning to be made of nothing? No, although it sell for a new nothing. If you serue for nothing, wherefore were you contriued, compiled, and brought to light? But will it please thee that I answer for the Nouice? I shall take it for a fauour, and find an excuse.

Xanthus the Philosopher comming to the market with his Schollers, and seeing there (amongst others) three men to bee solde, whereof two of them were a couple of stout tall lubbers, and the third an vnlikelie grub, of small timber and stature, very deformed, and a lisping stammerer; He asked of the two former what they could do, and both of them answered, All things: afterward demanding of the litle dwarfe what he could do? Esope (for so was his name) replied twise, Nothing, closly insinuating his fellows arrogancie, and the Philosophers too too affectioned opinion. This is strange quoth Xanthus, wherfore the hath thy master brought thee hither to be sold? And seeming to dislike the peniworth, niworth, went frō him. Esope calling him backagaine said, Buy me also: vnlikely may do wel, peraduenture may serue, if not for the good training and instruction of thy children, yet at the least in steade of a Bugbeare or Coleman, to fray & quiet them when they do trouble thee by their crying in thy priuate muses and studies. Yea but saith Xanthus, thou saist thou canst do nothing. It is true indeede, quoth Esope; for if my two fellowes effect all things, they will leaue very little or nothing for me to doe. The Schollers highly cōmended his wittie answere, and perswaded their Maste in any case to buy Esope. The Philosopher smiling immediatly payd his price, whom hee found to bee a trustie, faithfull, and profitable seruaunt aboue his fellowes. In like manner (it may be) this vnhappy wagge imagineth that his two fellowes, by name the construing Discipline, and volummous Lexicon, haue presumed too farre, boasting too much of their all things: or elsse, that thy accustomed pronenesse and facilitie hath yeelded ouermuch to their smoothing humor, & great magnificentwords. For if it be all in all, and the onely method, to teach the significations of a fewe words by peece-meale (which is the order of the construing discipline) then to teach the significations of all wordes ioyntly together (which is the propriety of the true Nomenclator) is nothing at all, and an indirect course. And if to teach the significations of greek and latine wordes (in some a hundreth times, in some fifty, in some neuer) be to doe all things, then to teach the signification of Greeke and Latin wordes, simul & semel (without any further irkesome iteration) is as good as nothing. Moreouer, if vaine and idle searches for a difficult word, read by the Scholler in some Authour be accounted all things: and that voluminous Dictionaries, in respect hereof be very great, and all in all with the studious, then it foloweth that the Nomenclator menclator of Primitiues, ſeruing the Scholler one to bee learned by leſſons ioyntly together (which in very deede is the ſole vſe and drift for the which it was ordained) is muſt nothing, or to bee had in no account or reputation. But if that the conſtruing diſcipline or common Lexicons in performing the matters aboue-ſaide, do notwithſtanding but ſome thing, then certes there is ſomething left for the Nomenclator of Primitiues. Now that the Nomenclator need not feare to compare with his fellowes, it ſhall euidenthe appeare by that which ſhall be ſpoken: and firſt of all for the conſtruing Art in his progres of teaching, it doth not miniſter or ſupply the rectos of ſet purpoſe, which bee the firſt appellations of euery thing, but inſerteth interchangeably the oblique caſes: whereas the perfect Nomenclator ſetteth downe and informeth onely the rectos, which being once thorowly learned, are ſufficient to deſcry and reueale to the vnderſtanding, the oblique or indirect caſes, whereſoeuer they bee read or found. Moreouer, the cõſtruing diſcipline acquainteth the learner with the ſignifications of wordes, becauſe his nature conſiſteth in tranſlation, but it performeth this courſe very tediouſly, and in many repetitions, feeding the Scholler with words ſcatteringly, or heere and there. Whereas the proceeding of the Nomenclator inſtructeth all his wordes in his particular leſſons once and ioyntly together. For in it will bee found no Greeke nor Latine word repeated twiſe, except it be homonymum, of diuers ſignifications. But for further explanation, it were not out of the way to demonſtrate this by example. The firſt conſtrued leſſon which is vſually propounded to young ſchollers in the latine tongue is this: Si Deus eſt animus nobis vt carmina dicunt. And the Maſter proceedeth conſtruing after this manner: Si, if, Deus, God, eſt, be, animus, a ſpirit, vt, as, carmina, verſes, dicunt, tell, nobis, vs.

this his leſſon be eight words, wherof four of them recti or Dictionarie words; to wit, Si, Deus, animus, vt, the other foure be obliqui, videlicet eſt, nobis, carmina, dicunt. Now this parcel of the conſtruing diſcipline, teacheth the Scholler to know the ſignifications of foure rectorũ, & ſo doth likewiſe the Nomenclator: for what Latine Dictionarie is there that is deſtitute of theſe foure couples of tranſlations, though vnder diuers heads, as, Si, if, vnder the letter S, Deus God, vnder the letter D, animus, a ſpirit or mind, vnder the head of A, vt, as, vnder the letter V? So that in this they agree, and ioyne handes together. But heerein conſiſteth the diſagreement: becauſe that the conſtruing diſcipline, if it learne the Scholler the ſignification of any vnknown worde in this leſſon, it will teach the ſame alſo in ſome other, and this is euery where to bee ſeene through the courſe of the whole method. And if the Schoolemaſter doe proceed in conſtruing ſix or ſeauen of the leſſons following in Cato, hee ſhall find that theſe foure recti (Si Deus animus vt, propounded in the firſt leſſon) to be alſo three or foure times reiterated in the foreſaid conſequent leſſons. Wherefore, if there fall out ſuch vnneceſſary repetitions in halfe a dozen leſſons, then in a ſcore there is more. So that it is moſt certain, that the further this diſcipline proceedeth, although the leſſons conſiſt of equall vvordes in number, notwithſtanding the Scholler ſhall learn leſſe and leſſe, fewer words and fewer, and the reaſon is, becauſe that the words of the firſt leſſon, fal to be all one with the wordes of the third or fourth. And hereof it followeth, that after the Scholler come to take leſſons in Terence or Virgil, which are higher Schoole-bookes, that then, although he haue 60 words in one conſtrued leſſon, yet he can be properly ſaid to learne but two or three, by reaſon that the reſt were learned in lower ſchoole-bookes; yea, and ſome of them an hundreth times, some fiftie, some more, some lesse. By this I hope it is cleere to the discreet & wise, that these friuolous triflings, and tedious idle repetitions, ought not to be preferred before the direct and orderly proceeding of the Nomenclators course, or Dictionarie method, which propoundeth his lessons without such tedious irksomnes; for by it the scholler may learn ten seuerall words this houre for his first lesson, and tenne different in another houre for his second: and so from the first decade of his booke to the last, without repeating of one word twise: & this is the speciallest commoditie of the Nomenclators Nothing. But to make the case yet cleerer, it is worth our labour to consider a comparison of the litterall Greeke elements. There is an alphabeticall Dictionary, and also a construing alphabet; both these will teach the ignorant, to knowe and distinguish the Greek characters: but the one wil effect in two daies, that the other cannot accomplish in a yeere.

For example sake, wouldest thou haue thy scholler to learne the Greeke letters perfectly? then the best course is to let him resort to the alphabeticall Dictionarie, which setteth downe all the Greeke characters, together with their seuerall potestate & valore, as thus; α: a: c, β: b: v, γ: g: ȝ, δ: d: t, ε: e: ζ: z: ȝ, θ: th: ι: e: i: κ: k: l: λ: l: μ: m: ν: n: ο: o: ξ: x: π: p: ρ: r: σ: ſ: τ: t: υ: y: φ: ph: χ: ch: ψ: ps: ω: o: and this Dictionarie will soone furnish the Scholler with the knowledge of all his Greeke characters.

Now if one should lead him to the Greeke Testament (neglecting this Alphabeticall Nomenclator) & there construe vnto him the Greek letters, pointing to euery particular character, and applying the peculiar valour to euery one according as they be set downe in that booke, he should finde himselfe something to do, and greatly disturbe the schollers tender capacitie, by infinit vaine Identities, and yet when all comes to all, peraduenture hee ſhould leaue his pupill ignorant o ſome of the foure and twentie characters, by reaſo that ſome one or two letters bee not vſed or expreſſe in all the Greeke Teſtament; now his punie in th meane time ſhould learne and read ſome one of th Greeke figures or letters a million of times, ſome on fiue thouſand, ſom a thouſand, ſome more, ſome leſſe perhaps ſome one or two (as I ſaid before) not at all. Wherefore, it is a thouſand times more conuenien to teach the knowledge of the Greeke or Hebrue cha racters, by the perfect path-way of the alphabetical Nomenclator, rather then by infinite tedious indirec tions of the Abecedary conſtruing diſcipline out o any Authour. By this the Reader may iudge of th vtilitie and profit in teaching the Nomenclator in an language, & in propounding the cõſtruing diſcipline for the caſe is all one, and the compariſons are heere correſpondent.

Further, the practice of Maſter Doctor Bright is ve ry effectuall for this purpoſe; for in his Art of Brachy graphy, which teacheth to write as faſt as one ca ſpeak treatably: he ſetteth down the characteriſtica Dictionarie to be learned and perfectly known, as th moſt eſpeciall part & member of that Science, ſuffici ent to ſtore the learner with ſpeedy & abſolute know ledge, in that diſcipline. Now if hee had iudged it ſo ready, & direct an order to haue taught by characteri ſticall conſtruing, hee might haue turned the vvhol booke of Martyres, or the Bible into his characters, & afterwards haue conſtrued theſe two ſeuerall Bookes but he knew right wel the inconuenience of this order for ſo dooing hee ſhould haue written and conſtrue to his auditors ſome of his characters two thouſan times, ſome a thouſand, ſome fiue hundreth (accor ding as the words of the foreſaid bookes be repeated ſome more, ſome leſſe: and peraduenture ſhould han had no vse at all of some dozen of his characters in both these Volumes. Whereupon it would insue, that these few should still remaine vnknowne to his auditors. But in his characteristical Nomenclator it is far otherwise, for there the learner may be sure to haue the whole sum of them set downe once and ioyntly together, with their seuerall words which they import, and there they may learne them in far shorter time then it is possible for the characteristicall construing to accõplish or bring to passe. Iust after the same maner stands the case of the instructing by the perfect Nomenclator of Primitiues, and the learning of the construing discipline out of Authors: for, they both enterprise & effect the selfe same things, they both inform the languages by applying of the significations, but not in the same time, nor after the same manner: the one is tedious and difficult; and the other ready and easie.

Wouldest thou teach exactly vnto thy schollers all the Latine and Greeke tongue, by the way of construing? this may bee done in some nine or tenne yeeres space, but not before thou hast construed vnto them all and euery one of the Greeke and Latine Authours which be now extant. For say that thou hast construed vnto them, but a score of Authors in either of these languages: This is not sufficient for the accurate knowledge of these tongues: for there will remaine in other Authors, as yet vnconstrued, a great sort of difficult hard wordes, which will cause them to stagger or stumble when he readeth thē, because they were neuer explaned in former construed lessons. So that the construing method can neuer be able to perform her scope and drift, before an vniuersall translation of all Bookes in the propounded language bee vndertaken and atchieued: which how tedious a course and perplexed a labyrinth it were, let the prudent teacher iudge, who is acquainted with some part of these labours. But in teaching the Lexicon of necessary & primitiue words these trauelles and paines are mightily diminished, & the summum bonum, or chiefe scope of Grammar An (which is to speake readily, and vnderstand perfectlie be heere in far shorter time attained vnto: For in it i to be learned as much and as many wordes, as be to b had in any Authors, be they neuer so large or volumi nous: euen as he that knoweth his Greeke or Hebrew alphabeticall Dictionarie exactly, is able to read an worde, syllable, or letter in any Auhour whatsoeue printed with the same characters. But heere it will be replied, though the methode of construing discipline doe not teach the signification of euery Greeke and Latine worde (for it translateth onely those which be met withall in construed schoole-bookes:) yet there is a sufficient supply for this defect: for a good volu minous Greeke or Latine Lexicon, will easily minister the signification of any difficult word as yet vnlearned in former construed lessons. But it is answered heere vnto, Dato vno absurdo, sequuntur & alia, as saith the Philosopher. For first it is a tenslesse or indirect course that the scholler should spend seauen or eight yeeres apprentishippe in learning part of the Greeke & Latine words by the tedious direction of the construing dis cipline, which would otherwise bee attained to in a yeere, by the gaine methode of the Nomenclator: & then to mend the matter, he must search forsooth the rest of the words vnsupplied one by one, out of volu minous Lexicons, in the space of a second prentiship of other eight or nine yeeres.

But there is a far directer course & neerer cut: for i he doubt, that there yet remain som two or three hun dreth wordes which were not made manifest by thes construed lessons: then perusing a Lexicon that briefly layeth downe the peculiar signification of euery word of the Greek or Latine language, he may quickly take a generall a generall ſuruey of all, and hence ſubduct by writing the vnknowne words from the known, and ſo briefely out of this catalogue learne them ioyntly together: for that which muſt needes bee done, had as good be done at once, as now and then by peece meale. Sith then a ſupply of theſe vnknowne wordes of neceſsitie muſt be learned, more expedient it is, by ſuch a regiſter to accompliſh this worke together, then to poare this week for one, & that week for another in voluminous Lexicons.

Heere (by the way) wee may note the ſlender end and vſe of common Dictionaries: and indeed ſtrange it is to conſider, that ſuch extraordinarie paines and induſtry ſhould bee imploied in framing and refining of them more then other Sciences, and yet no one diſcipline, the driſt whereof ſhould tend to ſo ſmall good or meane commodity, as the vſe and end of common Lexicons, ſeruing the ſtudious onely as bare and idle Regiſters, to find by ſearches ſome ſeely one word at a time, that the ſaying of the Poet may be iuſtly verefied heerein, Parturiunt montes, naſcetur ridiculus mus. Alas, it is a ſparing diet or a ſlender pittance, to preſcribe the learner a bitte or a morſell of Dictionarie words, whereas a good meale would hardly ſatisfie his hungry appetite. To be plaine, the Dictionary words reſtored to their proper & peculiar vſe, are to bee learned by leſſons ioyntly together, as well as the Etymologie & Syntaxis, that the ſtudious at all times beeing furniſhed with this liberal ſupply, may not continually ſtand to the curteſie of large voluminous Tomes, or to be beholden to them, for the ſlender reliefe of ſom ſingle words by peece meale.

And this (gentle Reader) is the prerogatiue of the Nomenclators Nothing, in regard of his two fellowes All-things. Now if thou pleaſe to admit of him into thy ſeruice (as the Philoſopher Xanthus and his Schollers lers entertained Esope) there is good hope, that in bounden dutie, he will proue as carefull and diligent a Cooke to his power, to serue in to thy boorders a dish or two of Tongues, as euer Esope was.
